NEWS BRIEFS

AC units removal

All window air conditioning units must be removed by Oct. 15. The window screens need to be replaced and all other items in the window that may interrupt window closure must be removed. Air condition units not removed by the deadline will be removed and dorm residents must show proof of purchase in order to get their unit back. For questions regarding this matter, contact Staff Sgt. Jimmy Davenport at 782-9766.

Curfew Change

Effective immediately, the new-peninsula-wide curfew is 9 p.m. to 5 a.m., every day. This curfew applies to all military personnel. In addition, the buddy wingman policy is also in effect until further notice for members going off base.

Incheon Taxi Warning

Recently there has been incidents with Koreans posing as taxi drivers willing to go to Kunsan. After hours of driving, they demand hundreds of dollars. Do not accept rides from taxis without proper credentials and markings.

Absentee Voting

Wednesday is Wolf Pack Election Day. This is the day all absentee ballots need to be filled out and mailed to ensure receipt by Nov. 2. For more information, go to www.fvap.gov or the Kunsan Federal Voting Assistance webpage at <https://web.kunsan.af.mil/Voting/index.htm>.

Auto Expo Scheduled

The Gunsan International Auto Expo will be Wednesday to Oct. 27 at the Gunjang National Industrial Complex in Gunsan City. Representing 30 countries will be 600 automotive and automotive parts professionals exhibiting vehicles, parts and accessories, audio systems, tuning products, tools and more. There is no charge and those interested can log onto www.gapa.or.kr or email gapa2004@gapa.or.kr for more information.

Money For Inbounds

Due to the runway closure, inbound personnel won't be arriving at Kunsan via the Patriot flight. The Wolf Pack Wheels program will accommodate members arriving. Sponsors should relay to inbound members to have cash ready to pay for transportation to Kunsan. The cost for the bus is $12.50 for staff sergeants and above and $11.50 for senior airmen and below. To receive proper ticket ask for 'PCS Bus'.

Army conducts live fire training

Kunsan members aid in training through support functions

By Airman 1st Class Juanika Glover
8th Fighter Wing Public Affairs

The Wolf Pack assisted more than 120 personnel from the Army's 1st Battalion, 2nd Aviation Regiment Oct. 1 through 4 during a live fire exercise meant to train and prepare soldiers for a real world combat experience.

Because of specific environment requirements for the exercise, the area around Kunsan Air Base was chosen as the best site for the training.

During the exercise, soldiers deployed from Camp Page and conducted live fire training with AGM-114K Hellfire missiles on AH-64D Apache helicopters using a technique called 'running fire' to detect and engage training targets while flying aircraft at high speeds.

"Running fire requires extensive coordination among aircrews and between individual crewmembers," said Capt. Sarah Pierce, 1-2 AVN REGT adjutant. "This exercise was an important opportunity for the unit to conduct challenging, realistic training."

She said in anticipation of the training event, the crews trained extensively using live ammunition.

"Live fire training is a key component of combat readiness because it validates the tactics, techniques and procedures developed during other training events and ensures aircrew and leader confidence in the aircraft weapons systems, target designation systems and the munitions," the captain said.

Kunsan Airmen assisted soldiers with fuel, communications, temporary quarters and food as well as manning support during the exercise.

"The Air Force (was) very supportive and we couldn't have done our job without their help," said Lt. Col. Chandler Sherrell, 1st Battalion, 2nd Aviation Regiment commander. "It just goes to show how much you can get done when you have teamwork."

"This is the only opportunity for us to get out and fire our primary systems and it's essential to us because we get to do it in range without affecting the civilian population," the commander said.

"That's very important because we got the chance to get our hands on the missiles and fire them to see how our helicopter and missile systems work," he added.

Along with air training, soldiers also got the chance to practice ground-based tactics that will be needed in preparing air support. The soldiers set up a "forward arming and refueling point," which is one of the most dangerous aspects of the training.

Soldiers prepared a refueling station where helicopters flew in and refueled while maintaining aircraft power just as soldiers would do in a real-life combat environment.

"Refueling an aircraft while it's still powered up is a very dangerous and hazardous job, not only because we're refueling the aircraft but also because we are dealing with live ammunition, so that makes the type of training we got here at Kunsan very important," said Sgt. Angelia Willis, 1-2 AVN REGT refueling and operations.

During the aircraft's return to the forward arming and refueling point, the refueling and operations team also had to quickly reload ammunition weighing up to 17 pounds apiece.

"The work is hard but I love being in the field, said Private 2nd Class Thomas Skach, 1-2 AVN REGT armaments avionics electrician. "The training we received here helps to make us combat ready. No one wants their first combat experience to be real and without any training on what to expect."

The soldier said he hopes the training he received at Kunsan would prove invaluable during a time when he would be faced with the reality of a combat environment.

Kunsan Air Base 2004 Fire Prevention Week Proclamation

WHEREAS Smoke and poisonous gases are the leading causes of death in fires, and can kill a person long before the flames will; and

WHEREAS Underestimating the power of fire and the time it takes to escape a fire put people at severe risk of fire death and injury; developing and practicing a fire escape plan at least twice a year are critical to escaping a real fire safely; and

WHEREAS A complete escape plan includes working smoke alarms, everyone in the building knowing two ways out of each room, having an outside location where everyone will meet upon exiting, and memorizing the local fire department's emergency telephone number; and

WHEREAS This year's theme, "Test Your Smoke Alarms" teaches people how to inspect and test their smoke alarms, so that they can prevent three of the leading causes of home fires - cooking, heating, and electrical; and

WHEREAS The Fire Department members at Kunsan Air Base are dedicated to the safety of life and property from the devastating effects of fire; and are joined by other concerned members of Kunsan Air Base, as well as other emergency service providers, safety advocates, and organizations in their fire safety efforts.

I, Colonel William Uhle, Jr., 8th Fighter Wing Commander, Kunsan Air Base, Republic of Korea, in cooperation with the National Fire Protection Association do hereby proclaim the week of October 5-9, 2004, as Fire Prevention Week. This week commemorates the Great Chicago Fire of 1871, which killed more than 250 persons, left 100,000 homeless, and destroyed more than 17,400 buildings.

I call upon the people of Kunsan Air Base to participate in fire prevention activities at home and work to execute "Test Your Fire Detectors" to ensure their safety and the safety of "Wolf Pack" members in the event of fire.

AETC special duty assignment team to visit

By Master Sgt. Matt Miller
8th Fighter Wing career advisor

Have you ever been interested in becoming a Recruiter, Military Training Instructor, Military Training Leader, Technical Training Instructor, or Professional Military Education Instructor? If so, the Air Education and Training Command Special Duty Assignment Team is offering the opportunity you have been seeking. The AETC team will host a Special Duty Assignment briefing 9:45 a.m. to noon, Oct. 21 at the Loring Club, main ball room.

There are few jobs in the Air Force more challenging, satisfying, and rewarding than an AETC special duty assignment. If you're a senior airman with at least 36 months Time In Service through master sergeant with less than 17 years Total Active Federal Military Service, the AETC Special Duty Assignment Team invites you to attend their briefing and learn more about these challenging careers. Enlisted personnel from all Air Force Specialty Codes that meet the previously identified criteria are eligible to apply for these positions and are encouraged to attend the briefing. Spouses of potential applicants are also invited. Members of the Recruiter Screening Team and the MTI Recruiting Team will conduct the briefing.

"Recruiters are responsible for the number and quality of young men and women who enlist and begin their Air Force careers. We are the first to touch the lives of our future airman," said Master Sgt. Richard DeLacy, Recruiter Screening Team NCOIC. "One of our best entitlements is the opportunity to choose your own recruiting assignment from more than 1100 possible locations."

"Everyone remembers their MTI," said Master Sgt. Edward Bradley, MTI Recruiting Team superintendent. "The MTI sets the stage for each individual's success in the Air Force and mentors hundreds of new Air Force members. The job is filled with substantial rewards for those who want to have a hand in molding our future airman."

Besides these intangible benefits we also are entitled to Special Duty Assignment pay and an annual supplemental clothing allowance."

The team can expedite the processing of an applicant's special duty application if they bring the completed application with them to the briefing.

To obtain a copy of the AETC special duty application, contact the wing career advisor, Master Sgt. Matt Miller at 782-9404.

When it comes to vaccinations, it's time to roll up your sleeves

DoD restarts Anthrax and Smallpox vaccinations for Pacific Command

Lt. Col. Roscoe Van Camp
8th Medical Group deputy commander

Beginning this month, all uniformed DoD personnel assigned to the Korean Peninsula, to include Wolf Pack members, will receive anthrax and smallpox vaccinations.

On 28 June 04, Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz signed a memorandum titled "Expansion of Force Health Protection Anthrax and Smallpox Immunization Programs for DoD." As the title indicates, this program is an expansion of the existing program due to ample supply of vaccines, and does not indicate any change in threat in the region.

Prior to the anthrax vaccination program slowdown in 2000 and 2001, caused by an unexpected shortage of the anthrax vaccine, military personnel assigned to certain areas in U.S. Pacific Command were included in the program. The resumption of the program in 2002 focused on Central Command. The action announced in the memorandum resumes the anthrax program in Pacific Command and begins the smallpox vaccination program in these areas, to include Kunsan.

Vaccination offers an extra layer of protection, in addition to antibiotics and other measures, needed for members of the armed forces, emergency-essential DoD civilians and contractor personnel carrying out mission-essential services.

"Anthrax and Smallpox are lethal biologic agents and pose a real threat," said Mr. Wolfowitz. "The vaccines are safe and effective."

"The health and safety of our servicemembers are the number one concerns of this program."

Anthrax remains one of the top biological warfare threats to U.S. troops. Vaccination is the safest and most reliable way to protect U.S. forces from a potential threat that is highly lethal, even with early treatment. Since June 2002, the DoD has vaccinated more than 750,000 service members with more than 2.2 million doses of anthrax vaccine.

Because of its contagiousness, smallpox too is considered a top biological warfare threat. It can cause a severe rash covering the whole body that can leave permanent scars, high fever, severe headaches or backaches. Smallpox infection kills about three out of 10 people infected. This disease, used as a bioweapon, can generate significant consequences and critically interrupt military operations. Since December 2002, DoD has vaccinated more than 625,000 service members.

Col. William W. Uhle, Jr., (left), 8th Fighter Wing commander, and Chief Master Sgt. Chuck Talley, 8th Fighter Wing command chief master sergeant, receive an Anthrax vaccination Monday at the 8th Medical Group. The 8th MDG is beginning the process of giving Kunsan members both Anthrax and Smallpox vaccinations.

Anthrax Vaccination

■ Anthrax has existed in nature for centuries.

■ Anthrax is a possible biological warfare agent. It can be produced in a large quantity, stored, and made into a weapon.

■ Untreated people who inhale Anthrax spores die in a few days.

■ Side effects are similar to other vaccine shots, and include burning and swelling at the site of the injection. 2.2 million doses of anthrax vaccine have been given.

Smallpox Vaccination

■ Smallpox has also existed in nature for centuries, but vaccination had eliminated this disease in 1979 worldwide.

■ The vaccine has been used for over 200 years. The vaccine does not contain smallpox, and you can not get smallpox from the vaccine.

■ Side effects include sore arm, fever, headache, and fatigue.

■ Everyone is required to fill out a smallpox questionnaire prior to receiving the vaccine. People who are pregnant, have a serious skin disease, or are at high risk for heart disease will not receive the vaccine.

■ The site should be bandaged and covered by clothing when in public. Always wash your hands after touching the site. Do not share towels, clothes or linens with anyone else. Do not have close contact with someone who is not immunized.

For more information about the Anthrax Vaccine Immunization Program, go to www.anthrax.mil and to www.smallpox.mil. Or contact the 8th Medical Group public health office at 782-4510.

Be the leader you promised you'd be

Lt. Col. Douglas Stevenson
8th Fighter Wing Staff Judge
Advocate

Look in the mirror and ask yourself whether you are the leader you promised yourself you would be? You all know what I am talking about. Years ago, (too many years for some of us) we all experienced first hand what we perceived to be examples of leadership that fell "short of the mark."

Whether we were the Airman and are now the junior, mid-level or senior NCO or whether we were the young lieutenant and are now the major, lieutenant colonel, or colonel - we've all seen it. A situation arose within the unit that required a command decision from someone in your supervisory chain-of-command. The decision was made ... and it turned out to be the wrong one ... maybe the wrong decision for the mission ... maybe the wrong decision for unit morale and/or the maintenance of good order and discipline. Either way, at least we told ourselves, the wrong decision. We followed the command decision because we were duty-bound to "salute smartly" and execute the lawful directive to the best of our ability. And we did just that. But we also told ourselves: "If I am ever in a position of leadership and I have to make that call, I will do it differently." You made a promise to yourself and the future Airmen you would lead that you would get it right ... you would make the right call ... for the mission ... for the people who served under you.

Now, the years and the assignments have gone by. You find yourself in a position where you now supervise and lead Airmen - as an NCOIC or OIC. So, when you look in the mirror in the morning as you get ready to meet the day's challenges do you see the leader you promised yourself you would be? We have all been assigned to squadrons, groups and wings where morale could not be better. Leadership broke the overall unit mission down to something everyone in the unit could grasp, visualize and strive to accomplish. Leadership achieved "buy in" and the unit therefore "invested" all their efforts into getting the mission done. Leadership also inspired confidence to such a degree that you told yourself you would follow this particular NCO or officer "through hell carrying ten gallons of gasoline."

There is a scene from the movie "Gettysburg" that dramatically depicts these leadership traits at their finest. The scene involves civil war Union Col. Joshua Chamberlain, commander of the 20th Maine Regiment. Just prior to the Battle of Gettysburg, Col. Chamberlain is informed that his unit has been assigned remnants of the 2nd Maine Regiment. It is the summer of 1863. Members of the 2nd Maine had enlisted in the summer of 1861, right after the outbreak of the civil war. Most of the members of the 2nd Maine had signed up for two years and had recently been discharged from the Army, having fulfilled the terms of their enlistment. These particular individuals now being reassigned to the 20th Maine had unwittingly signed three-year enlistments, meaning they were not being discharged and going home with the rest of their comrades. And they were none too happy about it. They let it be known that they would refuse to bear arms. They would fight no more.

So now what? Col. Chamberlain decides to speak to the men of the 2nd Maine. He gathers them on a hillside and tells them that although he could certainly understand why they are upset, this was not the time — right before a major battle which could determine the outcome of the war — to argue about the "fairness" of their three-year enlistments. He tells the men of the 2nd Maine he needs each and every one of them; that they are joining a proud unit that has suffered numerous casualties (of the 1,000 original members of the 20th Maine, only 300 remained); that the officers and men of the 20th Maine (and now the remnants of the 2nd Maine) were part of an Army with a "greater calling" ... they were charged with setting other men free and, in the end, they were fighting for each other. Col. Chamberlain concluded his speech to the men by stating: "If you decide to join us and fight with us ... I will personally be very grateful."

Those familiar with the story of the Battle of Gettysburg know that the vast majority of the men of the 2nd Maine took up arms and fought with distinction at Little Round Top on the second day of the battle. But why? Why were these disgruntled soldiers willing to put aside their personal grievances and hardship and again put their lives on the line for the Union cause? Because Col. Joshua Chamberlain "broke down the mission" into something the men of the 2nd Maine could grasp, visualize, and "buy into" ... they were fighting not just in any Army and not just for any cause ... they were fighting for a noble cause of setting other men free and, more importantly perhaps, they were fighting for each other. Col. Chamberlain also was able to inspire confidence in his men. He not only "talked the talk," he "walked the walk."

When you look in the mirror ... can you say you have made/will make the right decisions for the mission and for the people charged with carrying out the mission? When you look in the mirror ... do you see the type of leader who achieves mission "buy in" from his or her troops and inspires confidence to such a degree that they "drive on" in the face of any adversity to accomplish the mission? Have you become that leader you promised yourself you would be?

CFC: Your chance to make a difference

By Capt. Michael A. Coe
8th Fighter Wing CFC coordinator

Each fall, the Combined Federal Campaign comes to our workplace and gives us the chance to make an investment in our family, our base, our community and ourselves.

The CFC program offers a chance to give without leaving work. The CFC is exclusively for federal employees and brings with it the ease of using payroll deduction for making donations.

The CFC is efficient because volunteers provide most of the manpower required to conduct the campaign. It's efficient for the participating agencies because the administrative costs are reduced by a centralized campaign.

The Office of Personnel Management has screened each charity agency in your brochure. Every agency has demonstrated they provide the programs they advertise. All agencies account for administrative and fund raising costs to keep them below 25 percent of total contributions. Those agencies exceeding 25 percent have explained to the federal committee why and provided a plan of how they will reduce their costs below 25 percent in the future.

Kunsan has but one local charity ... the Family Support and Youth Programs charity. All donations to this charity are returned, in full, directly to the Wolf for use in morale, welfare and recreation and family support programs. In essence you are donating directly to Kunsan AB.

How much should you give? The amount is a matter of our own conscience and resource. Last year's average gift was $129.25 per person of those who contributed which equates to $10.77 per month.

The Wolf Pack raised $94,492 last year. Our goals this year are $98,000 and to contact and educate 100 percent of our personnel. We want you to understand the importance of the CFC and the tremendous benefit charitable and non-profit organizations in your stateside community receive by your participation. I believe the closer we got to the goal, the more winners we will have. The winners are folks whose lives are improved.

Remember your participation through the CFC is voluntary. You are giving through CFC not to CFC. For more information, see your unit CFC representative. Make a difference, donate today!

Going Mobile

By Staff Sgt. Joe Wallace
American Forces Network Kunsan

Master Sgt. Tammy Rangard-Hern, 8th Mission Support Squadron Personnel Readiness and Employments NCOIC, directs traffic at a very crowded base theater. She orders the more than 130 people to form two lines and have their papers, ID cards and dog tags ready for one last check before everyone gets sent to their deployed location. It's nothing new for many of those waiting their turn in yet another mobility line, but this deployment is different than most. Instead of going to Iraq, Afghanistan or a military exercise such as Cope Thunder, these airmen will deploy three hours down the road to Osan Air Base, in support of the Kunsan flying mission temporarily moved there. That relocation will last only as long as it takes to repair and upgrade Kunsan's runway, about two months. The location may be close and the away time short, but this deployment requires much the same coordination as any other.

"The process starts five to six weeks before we get to this point," said Sgt. Rangard-Hern. "We use our Unit Deployment Managers to help folks get ready to depart."

Getting ready to leave means getting the standard deployment checklist, and taking care of the usual small, but important details. The mobility line provides one last check of all those details before troops are sent to tent city at Osan.

"(You need to make sure) your Air Force Form 93 is accurate, you need a current ID card, dog tags, line badges, anything you need to do your job at the deployed location," Sgt. Rangard-Hern said. "We use our MPF folks to make that happens. We double check to make sure they have everything they need. If not, we fix it on the spot."

The Osan deployment is different than most.

More than 130 Kunsan members move through the mobility processing line for a deployment to Osan Air Base Oct. 1. The deployment will enable Kunsan's F-16s continue their mission utilizing Osan's runway while Kunsan's runway is being repaired.

Many troops took busses to Osan, but some people drove their own vehicles. Most are living in tent city, but others have rooms at base billeting.

People are allowed to come back to Kunsan during their off-duty time. Being sent to a spot practically in your own back yard does have its advantages, but that doesn't mean the deployment is easy duty.

Until the runway repairs are completed at Kunsan, those deployed pilots, maintainers and support crews have the big job of keeping the flying mission in the air from the deployed location.

Airman 1st Class Nathan Denham, 8th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron, goes over paperwork with Senior Airman Michael Lopez, 8th Mission Support Squadron, in the mobility processing line for a deployment to Osan Oct. 1.

"Staff Sgt. Angela Zeien has done it all in services — Fitlinxx manager, fitness center marketing director, intramural sports director, unit safety, unit advisory council, AFSA trustee and currently serves as the NCOIC of readiness. Her superior performance in each of her assigned duties led to a new job with greater responsibility. Fitlinxx, fines and intramural sports are heavily utilized here and her efforts to make these programs better and exceed the needs of the customers are recognized. She sees every challenge as another opportunity to excel. Sgt. Zeien supported a 250-Marine deployment exercise and her flawless execution of the base's support plan was key to the exercise's success. She recently supported the more than 300 person bed down for AEF 9/10. Sgt. Zeien coordinated all the requirements for the deployment and continually ensured the deployed commander's needs for his people were fulfilled. Confidence in her abilities and pride in the Air Force are readily apparent by her enthusiasm in undertaking each new task or assignment. She is the 'Pride of the Pack.'"
